

Ineke Creeze.- PhD, is an Associate Professor in Interpreting and Translation at Auckland University of Technology. She completed a postgraduate degree in Translation Studies at the University of Amsterdam, with James Holmes as one of her lecturers. She also completed undergraduate and postgraduate degrees in English language and literature and trained as a registered nurse in a large general hospital in Amsterdam, interacting with many migrant patients. After arriving in New Zealand in 1989 she became involved in developing health interpreting courses on the heels of the large cervical cancer inquiry. She has published extensively on interpreter and translator education and continues to work as a translator, interpreter and educator. Among her publications are Introduction to Healthcare for Interpreters and Translators (John Benjamins, 2013), Multicultural Health Translation, Interpreting and Communication (Routledge, 2019), and "Action research and its impact on the translation and interpreting classroom" (Routledge Handbook of Translation and Pragmatics).